Samsung to provide Jelly Bean upgrade for "eligible" devices

Samsung is really stepping up to the plate now-a-days, and unlike other Android OEMs, Samsung is quickly jumping on the Android Jelly Bean upgrade train. In a recent announcement, Samsung notified users that they will be providing upgrades for Jelly Bean "eligible" devices.

Eligible devices can mean anything more than two, three, four, and maybe even all of Samsung's Android devices. As much as we hope that Samsung will provide Jelly Beans for many of its devices, it's also very unlikely that Samsung will put forth the resources to provide Android upgrades for its lineup of Android powered devices.

Their flagship device, Galaxy S III, is the first candidate to receive the Jelly Bean update. If you consider the Galaxy Nexus a Samsung device (which it is...) then the S III will be the second. Nonetheless, the S III along with a few other Samsung devices will receive Jelly Bean in the coming months.

The Galaxy S II recently got an update to ICS so the S II Jelly Bean upgrade may not be a priority for Samsung. However, the S II is more than capable for powering the latest Android and it will be a shame if Samsung decides to not provide official Jelly Bean support for its S III predecessor.

This is the message straight from the "world's largest smartphone manufacturer":

"Samsung will soon announce which additional devices are eligible for the Jelly Bean update. As the world's largest smartphone manufacturer, Samsung leads the Android community with best-in-class devices like the Galaxy S III, and is creating new device categories with products like the Galaxy Note. Samsung has delivered the most Nexus-branded lead OS devices and we are pleased that Google will be bringing Samsung Galaxy Nexus and Nexus S customers the first experiences of Jelly Bean on a handheld device."

Office 2013 will be Microsoft's next installment of its office suite software, and, as with all other previous releases, there will be new icons to represent each particular program. Oh yes, MS Office 2013 will also have built-in PDF editing!

Office 2013 will be Microsoft's next installment of its office suite software, and, as with all other previous releases, there will be new icons to represent each particular program. Oh yes, MS Office 2013 will also have built-in PDF editing!

Two MS Office 2013 icons shown on visside.net may be the blueprint to the whole suite. As seen from the OneNote and the Excel icons, the letter that corresponds to the programs, "N" and "X", are imprinted in white into a rectangle at a slightly skewed angle. There's a very slim chance that the rest of the icons for MS Office 2013 will deviate from that of the OneNote and Excel examples.
